Notes On Eggs.

WITH the speedy approach of warm weather eggs are becoming very plentiful, and is a consequence cheap. It stands to reason therefore, that if it is possible to keep them in good condition from the plentiful to the scarce season a considerable amount of profit may be effected. It is as well, however, to state at the very outset, that by no method of preservation yet introduced, are we enabled to retam the freshness of flavor equal to new fauld. For cooking or manufacturing purposes they are excellent, and there is always a good demand for this class of eggs during the wintermonths. It know a woman living in the north of England who, a few years ago, preserved about 20,000 eggs during April and May, when eggs were selling at 18 to 20 for 25 cents, kept them for six or seven months, and then retailed them spickled eggs at two ents each. There are several excellent methods of preserving gegs, between which there is little to choose, but the point of paramount importance is not so much the actual method employed, but that the eggs are two ents each. There are several excellent methods of preserving them until twelve hours have elapsed after they have been laid, but as so possible they should be attended to. It is useless trying to make the point to bear in mind with preserved eggs is, that they should be used as quickly as possible after removing from the source of preserving them until twelve hours have elapsed after they have been laid, but as setting the pour down together, thus assisting from the source of preserving them until twelve hours have elapsed after they have been laid, but as setting the repon. Other methods of preserving that may be mentioned, but which it is unnecessary to describe, are—diping into boiling water, thus slight y coagulating the white; packing in rommon salt; smearing with butter or fat of some description; and packing in bran. The methods of preserving eggs commonly employed are legion, but there are three that possess certain advantages, and that can be more onfidently recommended. The very best method is by means of cold storage, and whenever one is living near a plant, the wisest plan is to send the eggs thereto. A charge is usually made for storage room, but this a quite small, and probably works oft cheaper than adopting one of the other methods. We, in England, are not nearly as fortunate in the matter of cold storage as are our good cousins in the States, as such places are only to be found in our large cities. The eggs should not be crack them, but they should be merely chilled. Eggs preserved in this fashion retain a good deal of their original flavor, and when they have been carefully chilled by an experienced person their quality has but slightly deteriorated.

Local Lodge Now in Fine Condition and Almost Out of Debt.

Last Sunday was the day set apart by the Odd Fellows of the State of Kentucky for decorating the graves of deceased members of the order. This is the first service of the kind held in the state, but will be observed hereafter once a year by every lodge in the state.

lodge in the state.

Tennessee and many other states in the Union now observe the day, and it will eventually become general wherever Odd-Fellowship is known, and that is almost everywhere.

The occasion was honored by the presence of nearly 30 members of Home and Pythagoris lodges of Clarksville, who formed in line with Green River Lodge at their home on Ninth street, opposite the postoffice, about 2 o'clock p. m. and marched to Hopewell with the local lodge, numbering together about 300, followed by a long line of vehicles occupied by families of the members of the order. The procession was led by Lebkuecher's band, who with muffled drums, rendered funeral dirges on the route. A large crwd had already gathered to witness the exercises, and altogether there were something like 2,000 people on the grounds. The occasion was honored by the

After singing "Nearer My God to Thee," a prayer was offered by Rev. E. H. Buil. He was followed by Mr. R. A. Gardner, of Clarksville, in an eloquent address. Then the twelve little flower girls, dressed in white, filled their baskets with flowers, and with the assistance of Misses Hallie Johnson and Hallie Collins, strewed flowers over the graves of departed members of the order in what is known as the new cemetery. Preceded by the band playing a dirge, the throng then wended its way to the shade trees near the embankment known as "The Moat," where Mr. John Stites paid a most glowing tribute to members of the order who sleep beneath the sod, also going back to the origin of the order of the three links, which some claim had its birth among the Romans in the year 55. Councilman Lucian H. Davis then spoke in most glowing terms of the Widows and Orphans' Home at Lexington, Ky. Mr. Davis showed thorough familiarity with the history of this Home, and recited many of the great results that have been accomplished by the order in earing for the mothers and children left to the care of the lodges of the state.

In order to "bottle up" this great body of water, furnished mainly by three springs of unusual purity and as cold as water can be in its natural state, the company, of which Mr. W. T. A Plea For Thoroughbreds.

We know of no disease more contagious than the "chicken fever," and this perhaps partly accounts for the rapid spread and development of the poultry industry, $250,000,000 output from poultry alone is enormous and far exceeds any other single industry, but the demand seems to increase accordingly for these products.

The hatching assuan is have, again.

The hatching season is here again and I appeal to farmers in behalf of thoroughbred fowls, feeling certain that they would be satisfied with nothing less if their merit and real value were only understood. The senior officer turned his televier with the standpoint of a farmer instead of a fancier, and methinks it would take a long time to find a farmer that it would be easy to convince of the merits of scrub hogs, or cattle over the thoroughbreds.

Then gains and it was a standard to the horizon.

"Help. I am attacked," fluttered plainly the international flage-ode, in the serior officer reported the october of the merits of scrub hogs, or cattle over the thoroughbreds.

Then why should be overlook the importance of thoroughbred fowls?
Still this is done repeatedly and you will be surprised in looking over the farms of this great commonwealth to see how few flocks there are of large-size productive, unformly beautiful and well-bred birds: and at the immense number of mongrels still in existence.
Why this is so I cannot understand for in this wonderfully unprogressive why this is so I cannot understain for in this wonderfully progressive age every farmer knows who is a-board the car of Progress, just how many pounds a bushel of corn should add to his Poland China or Chester White hogs and he knows to that the same amount of feed will not produce as good results in the "razor

I think I know whercof I speak or I have raised both kinds and it is rith no feeling of pride that I admit for I have raised both kinds and it is with no feeling of pride that I admit it.

However, the mongrel days with me have long gone by and I believe I never made a better investment than when I purchased 50 Black Langshan eggs some 8 years ago, nor spent time to better advantage than in carefully rearing the 43 chicks hatched therefrom. Although a stray cat (peace to her ashes) help-etherself liberally to part of this flock still the remainder furnished the foundation for my present flock and the surplus cockerels sold, a bout 3 times paid for the eggs.

I have no fears of the thorough-bred poultry business being over-done any more than of other farm stock and if you can not sell your stock for breeders the reason of first class quality that yields us a profit. It is such an easy matter to to get started whith thoroughred fowls and the profits so much more satisfactory that it looks to me liberate the proper policy to waste good time, money and feed on anything else.

The Buff Orpington duck is not quite so bright in color as the Buff Orpington fowl, being more of a khaki color only not so dull. They make a fine table bird and their ergs are larger; they are no doubt the best utility duck in the world for laying and table purposes besides having a very handsome appearance.—A. P. Advocate.
